[Role of Ca²⁺ channels in the influence of veratrine on the activity of liver mitochondria]. Effects of veratrine on the activity of isolated liver mitochondria were studied. The veratrine was shown to activate Ca²⁺-transporting ATPase and phosphorylase phosphatase in the sarcoplasmic reticulum. Veratrine stimulates mitochondrial respiration and respiratory control in the state 3 with uncoupler 2,4-dinitrophenol and substrate Ca²⁺ concentration of 3 mM. Veratrine caused inhibition of oxidative phosphorylation at lower concentrations of Ca²⁺ and the effect was more marked at higher concentrations. It is concluded that effects of veratrine on the activity of liver mitochondria are due to its action on the sarcoplasmic reticulum Ca²⁺ pump. Veratrine may be considered as a possible factor of mitochondrial intoxication. The characters are perfectly clear, and with that comes the need for a great deal of detail. Graphic novel-style comics is all about the facial expressions and the details of the character's physical presence; it would be an entirely different medium if we were to go by other means. There has been a huge push for the popularity of hyper-detailed visual narratives lately, which is partly to blame for the high quality and level of detail in the character designs used for cyberpunk anime. It's worth noting that unless you are planning on doing the series in full-on visual novel style, the designs for the main characters would be more effective if it was more realistic and naturalistic. They would have more of a Hollywood feel to them, which is a good thing in its own right. Sometimes, that has an impact on the way the characters act as well. The whole concept of the character is based on a type of "human-ness", a certain inherent nature that the character has. I'm not going to delve too much into that, but here is an example of someone using a "fake-detailed" aesthetic to achieve an entirely different effect. If you look closely at the top image, the girl is uncomfortable, but a real-life depiction might have us "seeing" her as a more happy-go-lucky person. Her face is not reflective of a "woe-is-me" kind of face, it doesn't match the dramatic effect that she would normally seem 82157476af
